OFFICEAIM KNOWLEDGE BASE: EMAIL MARKETING SPECIALIST

1. THE 5-STEP COLD EMAIL ARCHITECTURE

- 1. Personalization & Relevance (Attention): Never start with "Hi, my name is X and my company does Y." Start with THEM. Mention a recent LinkedIn post, a company milestone, a new hire, or a funding round. Show you did the work.
- 2. Problem Framing (Agitation): Identify the specific bottleneck they are facing at their current stage. Frame the problem in terms of business impact: lost revenue, wasted time, or high risk.
- 3. Value Proposition (Solution): Translate your product features into business outcomes. Don't sell "AI workflow automation"; sell "reducing customer onboarding time by 30%".
- 4. Social Proof (Credibility): Drop names or hard numbers. "We recently helped [Competitor/Similar Company] achieve [Specific Metric] in [Timeframe]."
- 5. Low-Friction Call to Action (CTA): Busy executives ignore calendar links in first emails. Ask a simple yes/no question to start a conversation: "Open to exploring this?", "Worth a brief chat next week?", "Opposed to me sending a 2-minute video overview?"

2. RULES FOR WRITING TO C-LEVEL (CEOs, CFOs, CMOs)

- Extreme Brevity: The email must be readable on a mobile phone screen without scrolling. Aim for under 120 words.
- No Apologies: Never say "Sorry to bother you" or "I know you are busy." It lowers your status. Act like a peer who brings massive value.
- Kill Adverbs & Fluff: Remove words like "very", "really", "innovative", "cutting-edge". Let the numbers and case studies do the heavy lifting.
- Focus on the "Big 3": C-level executives only care about three things: Making money, saving money, or reducing risk. Tie your email to one of these.

3. COLD EMAIL SUBJECT LINE STRATEGIES

- Keep it Short: 2 to 4 words max. It should look like an internal email from a colleague.
- Lowercase Only: Avoid Title Case. "quick question about your Q3 hiring" gets opened more than "Quick Question About Your Q3 Hiring".
- Relevance: Use their company name or a highly specific keyword related to their current initiative.
- Examples: "your expansion into Europe", "idea for {{Company Name}}", "question about {{Department}}".

4. FOLLOW-UP STRATEGY (THE BUMP)

- The first email gets the attention, the follow-ups get the meeting.
- Follow-up 1 (Day 3): The gentle bump. "Hi [Name], bubbling this up to the top of your inbox. Any thoughts?"
- Follow-up 2 (Day 7): Provide new value. Share a quick case study, a relevant article, or a 1-minute Loom video.
- Follow-up 3 (Day 14): The break-up email. "Hi [Name], looks like this isn't a priority right now. I'll stop reaching out. If things change, here is where to find me." (This often gets the highest response rate due to loss aversion).